Heres part of the content - you would like to know it all Delve into this book today! . . . : Another attempt at independent replication, headed by Robert Huggins at Stanford University, which also reported early success with a light water control, saved cold fusion almost single-handedly and became the only scientific support for cold fusion in the 26 April US Congress hearings. text 1 But, when he finally presented his results, he reported an excess heat of only one celsius degree, a result that could be explained by chemical differences between heavy and light water in the presence of lithium, notes 1 he had not tried to measure any radiation, and his research was derided by scientists who saw it later. . . . The decline of publications in cold fusion has been described as a failed information epidemics. text 4 The sudden surge of supporters until roughly 50 of scientists support the theory, followed by a decline until there is only a very small number of supporters, has been described as a characteristic of pathological science. text 5 notes 3 The lack of a shared set of unifying concepts and techniques has prevented the creation of a dense network of collaboration in the field; researchers perform efforts in their own and in disparate directions, making the transition to normal science more difficult. . . . Some researchers reported detecting ^4He but without the expected neutron or tritium production; such a result would require branching ratios strongly favouring the third pathway, with the actual rates of...
