J. Tilden, Director of the Committee, who said: The Highway and Highway Transport Education Committee has called this conference for the purpose of getting your advice and help. The rapid development of motor transport, with increased production of motor vehicles and consequent stimulation of public interest in highways, has raised economic questions difficult to answer. Many of these have not as yet even been clearly formulated. Technical schools have surprisingly few courses bearing on the subject, although it is of vital concern to every citizen. We have asked you, therefore, to come together as representatives of various interests - industrial, governmental, municipal and university - to exchange views and, through discussion, indicate the direction in which educational activity may be started. In the letter of invitation it
